

De Bestiarum Naturis 473 – the Undines

The waves of the sea are by the billions, and each of these is made up of thousands other small waves, called Undines.

They separate from the bigger wave when they want to sing and charm a person passing by.

There are nine billion persons on earth nowadays but there are only one or two billion people passing by, in a lifetime.

So, we can say with absolute certainty that every person passing by has at least two or three million Undines to be fascinated by and to hear their song.

*Of course, if they all passed by all places at the same time,
a memorable chorus would have been heard.*
